PITCHER IRRIGATION DEVELOPMENT

1977 Dec 18

Pitcher irrigation uses unglazed fired-clay pitchers placed near plant, periodically filled with water which seeps out through pores in fired clay.

Should be developed as a system in which rows of pots connected with free-flow pipes, tops flattened. Avoids all filtration & blockage problems.

Develop plastic alternatives to clay pots, with preferential osmotic properties.

WHOLE IS GREATER THAN THE SUM OF THE PARTS 1987 Jan 4

Often it appears that the 'whole is greater than the sum of the parts', as with an organization, a system, a library.

It appears that the information content of the 'whole' is more than the sum of the information contents of each of the parts. This may be because the LINKAGES between the parts carry much information, perhaps more than within the parts themselves. In fact human memory, in the brain, may be better explicable in terms of inter-neurone linkages rather than in terms of the neurones themselves.
